INCHES FROM The Golden-Plated Rule

By Lillian Paschal Day

Handled Without Gloves

My white gloves needed cleaning. I took them to Mossine's. He cleaned them with distillate. It's cheaper than benzine. But the price of cleaning is up. It's three times what it once was. They smelled like a dead garage. I asked him how about it? He said he couldn't smell anything. "You must have a cold," I replied "Would you wear these to a party?" "Sure I would," he exclaimed. "What ails your nose anyway?" "Nothing, It's normal, that's all.

Why do you use distillate? Bensine or naphtha wouldn't smell." "You know so much," he sneered; Better come and run my business. "You need a good smeller," I said.
"Also the Golden Rule. Ever hear of it?"
He snickered, "What's that?"

The salesgirl tittered:
"O Mr. Mossine! You're so funny!"
"Keep it up." I advised her. It may mean a fifty-cent raise." He pranced and chortled. "Guess I'm boss here. You'll do as I say or nothing.

Leave 'em out to air."
"I did—two weeks," I insisted.

Looking ahead, Peggy got a third surprise—more startling than the others—the slope led to the edge of the same cliff over which the river leaped in the waterfall. Peggy had time only to see this and to give a shrick, when she shot over the brink and found herself falling, falling, falling into a great chasm.

Paggy gave herself up for lost—that fall would surely finish her. She shut her eyes and held her breath. Falling didn't hurt, except to send ley shivers through her, but, oh, what a bump she'd get when she hit the ground.

Then Peggy got a fourth surprise. She didn't hit the ground. Instead she went crashing into the branches of a large tree. The branches bent under her weight and broke her fall without hurting her a bit.

But it wasn't a goatskin rug, but still nother surprise, as will be found in tohorow's chapter of the stery.

The sixth surprise was the way the racked her.

Just then the first breath of the evening breeze rustled the leaves of the pear tree. It caught a lock of Marie's hair and whipped it across her face.

"Oh!" she screamed, "a snake! I felt him!" She brushed frantically at her face, lost her hold and fell at our feet. Tenderly we carried her into the library and laid her on the couch. I pushed back her hair, and for the first time we saw a faint blue, oval shadow on her forehead.

And that is all the story of Marie Gaspard. The doctor went to France; and I in a few months bought my chicken farm. Sometimes, on moonlight nights, I see my pear treet rustling in the breeze. Sometimes a white misty figure bends toward me from the branches; and I catch a glimpse of Marie's sweet face, a faint blue shadow on her forehead.

By MARY WHITNEY It is now eight years that I have been a my chicken farm, and I shall never lave it. The thought of scientific rearch fills me with the same horror that felt when I saw Marie lying dead in the garden, a faint blue shadow on her brehead. I was just out of college when I wen

And What Pretty Autumn Hats at $3.85!

Small hats, mostly, for they are smartest for this season of year, are of velvet in black or combinations of black and lighter shades. A few are in black or brown with blue chenille braid, in king's blue with tan braid or in black with green braid.

Another hat, with a flaring brim, that is very becoming, has a sand color crown and a black velvet brim. It happens to be sketched, too!

Also, some little sports hats are to be seen.

Tailored Hats For School Girls $3.85 to $8.50 Wide-brimmed hats of beaver-as good-looking as can be; small hats of velvet with streamers; hats of velour, and so on, are all well tailored and are in the darker shades that mothers usually like to choose for school.

They will fit girls of 6 years up to young girls of high school age.

Women's Satin Frocks

Are at Their Best in Autumn Before you begin wearing wool frocks, there is an interim which is admirably filled by a dress of satin. It has the smartness of the new season, without the warmth of wool.

Delightful dresses in navy blue, brown or gleam ing black are made in scores of interesting ways. Some are trimmed with beads, some have lace panels at front and back and are pleated at the sides. Slender young women will be enthusiastic over the frocks that are puffed or ruffled about the hips.

Women in mourning will be glad to know of some lusterless dresses of crepe meteor, simply made. Prices start at $15, $16.50, $20 and go gradually upward to $97.50 for a handsome gown of satin combined with tinsel-embroidered Georgette. Between $25 and $40 there is a remarkably fine collection of dresses.

There's a Great Call for New Skirts

So it's welcome news that there is good choosing between $5 and $10.75. Here are all sorts of pretty checks and, at $8.75, some soft plaids in various rich browns. Some of the skirts are pleated, some are gathered and some are semifitted. Any one will make a good school skirt.

> Girls' Regulation Dresses of the Better Type

Now that schools have opened their doors regulation dresses come into their own, for there is nothing quite so satisfactory for classroom wear. These dresses are of fine all-wool blue serge, which means service, and theirs is a style that is universally becoming, which means pleasure.

At $25 there are both one-piece dresses trimmed with white braid and the proper emblems in red and white, and two-piece dresses trimmed with white silk braid and emblems. The serge in each dress is firm and will give long service.

These dresses will fit girls of 14 to 18.
